Then, on your answer sheet, find the number of the question and blacken the space that corresponds to the letter for the answer you have chosen. Blacken the space completely so that the letter inside the space does not show.

Listen to the following example.

Woman: The movie is almost ready. I'll make some popcorn before we start.

Man: Great idea. It's much better to have it here at home than to buy it at a concession stand.

Woman: Exactly. Could you get the large cooking pot from the cabinet? We don't need corn on the cob or any special heater, just a pot, some kernels, and a little oil.

Man: Popcorn really is one of the cheapest snacks around, isn't it?

Woman: It is. That's one reason people like it so much. But I won't add much butter. Butter tastes good, but it mostly adds extra calories.

Man: I've always wondered what actually makes popcorn pop.

Woman: Each kernel has a tiny amount of moisture inside. When the kernel is heated, that moisture turns to steam. Pressure builds until the kernel explodes.

For that reason, all infected individuals can potentially spread the disease, not only those who already show clear symptoms.

Speaker: Opinion researchers often study why people choose certain goods and services. In recent surveys, many consumers have said that time is one of their most valuable resources. This helps explain the popularity of fast-food restaurants, household services, and disposable goods, since these products can save time. Researchers also find that appearance, or how people look, strongly affects many buying decisions, especially in areas such as clothing, cosmetics, and exercise programs. For questions 1-50, you need to select the best answer, (A), (B), (C), or (D), to each question. Then, on your answer sheet, find the number of the question and fill in the space that contains the letter of the answer you have selected. Fill in the space completely. Answer all questions following a passage on the basis of what is stated or implied in the passage.

Read the following passage:

A tomahawk is a small ax used as a tool and a weapon by the North American Indian tribes. An average tomahawk was not very long and did not weigh a great deal. Originally, the head of the tomahawk was made of a shaped stone or an animal bone and was mounted on a wooden handle. After the arrival of the European settlers, the Indians began to use tomahawks with iron heads. Indian males and females of all ages used tomahawks to chop and cut wood, pound stakes into the ground to put up wigwams, and do many other chores. Indian warriors relied on tomahawks as weapons and even threw them at their enemies. Some types of tomahawks were used in religious ceremonies. Contemporary American idioms reflect this aspect of American heritage.

EXAMPLE I

Early tomahawk heads were made of

- (A) stone or bone
- (B) wood or sticks
- (C) European iron
- (D) religious weapons

According to the passage, early tomahawk heads were made of stone or bone. Therefore, the correct answer is (A).

EXAMPLE II

How has the Indian use of tomahawks affected American daily life today?

- (A) Tomahawks are still used as weapons.
- (B) Tomahawks are used as tools for certain jobs.
- (C) Contemporary language refers to tomahawks.
- (D) Indian tribes cherish tomahawks as heirlooms.

The passage states, "Contemporary American idioms reflect this aspect of American heritage." The correct answer is (C). After you read the directions, begin work on the questions.

Questions 1-10

During the Middle Ages, societies were based on military relationships, as landowners formed their own foot armies into which they drafted their tenants and hired hands. The infantry that fought its way forward against the opposition engaged in heavy ground battles that proved costly in the ratio of losses to wins. These soldiers carried darts, javelins, and slings to be used before closing ranks with the enemy, although their swords and halberds delivered crushing blows on contact. Such armed forces were active for limited periods of time and had a predominantly defensive function, displayed in hand-to-hand combat. Because this sporadic and untrained organization was ineffective, the ruling classes began to hire mercenaries who were generously compensated for their tasks and subject to contractual terms of agreement. The greatest idiosyncrasy of a hired military force was that the troops sometimes deserted their employers if they could bank on a higher remuneration from the opposition. The Swiss pikemen became the best-known mercenaries of the late Middle Ages. In the 1300s, they practically invented a crude body armor of leather and quilted layered head gear with nose and skull plates, ornamented with crests. Their tower shields proved indispensable against a shower of arrows, and their helmets progressed from cone cups to visors hinged at the temples. As their notoriety increased, so did their wages, and eventually they were rounded into military companies that later grew into the basic units in almost all armies. During the same period, the first full-size army of professional soldiers emerged in the Ottoman Empire. What set these troops apart from other contemporary armies was that these soldiers remained on duty in peacetime.

Companies of mercenaries were employed on a permanent basis in 1445, when King Charles VII created a regular military organization, complete with a designated hierarchy. Gunpowder accelerated the emergence of military tactics and strategy that ultimately affected the conceptualization of war on a broad scale. Cannons further widened the gap between the attacking and the defending lineups, and undermined the exclusivity of contact battles.

Questions 11-18

Observations of nature gained a foothold in art in the 1860s and 1870s when painters interested in science attempted to analyze the effects of light on color by means of physics. If the goal of impressionist painters was to copy the visual qualities of sunlight at different angles, they needed to reproduce light as it appears to the spectator when reflected from the surfaces of structures. In painting, the effects of shade were conveyed by using small strokes to minimize breaks between hues. The so-called divided color method appeared to grasp a shimmering reflection of shadows when minimal portions of primary-color paints were applied directly to the canvas, instead of being blended on the palette.

Edouard Manet departed from the fairy-tale style of painting with its tacit symbolism and centered his compositions around the visual reality of ordinary objects. Mary Cassatt followed with her spontaneous and subtle portraits of children, and Edgar Degas depicted ballet dancers in their artful poses and the color schemes of their costumes in soft colors.

Postimpressionism built on the techniques developed by impressionists and supplemented it with keen insight into other dimensions of objects and scenes. Paul Gauguin chose to disregard the classical conventions of composition, the application of color, and the shaping of form and imitated primitivist art that upheld the beauty of native drawings in Tahiti.

Henri Matisse, created a unique style of poster graphics, deceptively simplistic in its rhythm and texture. In his view, paintings were intended to brighten and improve reality, not copy it. He noted that photography can accomplish this latter goal just as well, or even better.

Questions 19-30

The symptoms of hay fever include watery and itchy eyes and a runny, congested nose. People suffering from hay fever may experience occasional wheezing and repeated bouts of sneezing and may even lose their sense of smell. Some victims of hay fever may also have stopped-up ears. About 30 percent of those who suffer from hay fever may develop the symptoms associated with periodic asthma or a sinus infection. The allergen-antibody theory does not fully explain allergic reactions because the membranes and glands in eyes and ears are controlled by the independent nervous system, which keeps these organs in balance. But the independent nervous system itself is part of the emotional-response center and may cause the feelings of anger, fear, resentment, and lack of self-confidence in reaction to allergy-causing substances.

The most common cause of hay fever is the pollen of ragweed, which blossoms during the summer and autumn. When airborne pollen particles, as well as mold, come into contact with the victim's membranes, they can cause allergic reactions that release histamine and result in a virtual blockage of air passages. To prevent hay fever or to decrease the severity of its symptoms, contact with the ragweed pollen should be reduced. Although some communities have attempted to eliminate the plants that cause the reactions, elimination programs have not been successful because airborne pollen can travel considerable distances. Antihistamine can help with short but severe attacks. Over extended periods of time, however, patients are prescribed a series of injections of the substance to which they are sensitive in order to increase immunity and thus be relieved of the seasonal allergy

Prehistoric horses were far removed from the horses that Christopher Columbus brought on his ships during his second voyage to the New World. Although fossil remains of "dawn horses" have been excavated in several sites in Wyoming and New Mexico, these animals, which were biologically different from contemporary horses, had become extinct millennia before the onset of the Indian era. Although moviegoers visualize an Indian as a horse rider, Indians were not familiar with horses until the Spanish brought them to Mexico, New Mexico, Florida, and the West Indies in 1519. Those that escaped from the conquerors or were left behind became the ancestors of the wild horses that still roam the southwestern regions of the country. The Indian tribes scattered in the western plains began to breed horses about 1600.

The arrival of the horse produced a ripple effect throughout the Great Plains as the Indians living there were not nomadic and were engaged in rudimentary farming and graze-land hunting. Tracking stampeding herds of buffalo and elk on foot was not the best way to stock quantities of meat to adequately feed the entire tribe during the winter. However, mounted on horses, the hunting teams could cover ground within a substantial distance from their camps and transport their game back to be roasted, dried into jerky, or smoked for preservation. The hunters responsible for tribe provisions stayed on the move almost continuously, replacing their earth-and-sod lodges with tepees. Horses carried not only their riders but also their possessions and booty. The Blackfoot Indians of the Canadian plains turned almost exclusively hunters, and the Crow split off from the mainstream Indian farming in favor of hunting. In fact, some of the Apache splinter groups abandoned agricultural cultivation altogether.

The horse also drastically altered Indian warfare by allowing rapid maneuvering before, during, and after skirmishes. With the advent of the horse, the Apache, Arapahoe, and Cheyenne established themselves as a territorial monopoly in the Plains. Because Indians did not have the wheel and had dragged their belongings from one settlement to another, horses also enabled them to become more mobile and expedient during tribal migrations. In fact, the Cheyenne abolished the custom of discarding belongings and tepee skins simply because there were no means to transport them.

Questions 41-50

Lighthouses and lightships employ signal lights and foghorns to warn boaters of shoals and of oncoming foul weather. In recreational marinas, Coast Guard stations and yacht clubs inform boaters of weather and water conditions with storm flag signals displayed during the daytime. Amateur boaters are required to acquaint themselves with the signals that can make them aware of oncoming storms and small craft advisories. Boaters who can recognize an approaching storm when no warnings are posted have the advantage of time when heading for shelter. Compasses and marine charts identify the locations of anchored whistles and floating buoys that have battery-powered lights, bells, or horns to sound or show warnings with the onset of high winds. On the marine charts, radio beacons and flashing buoys are assigned numbers that help navigators to identify their locations and to mark the edges of channels, underwater obstructions, reefs, and wrecks.

In each section of the coastline, lighthouses emit characteristic lights, published in light lists, so that mariners can zero in on their bearings by observing the beam pattern and consulting the list. "Making lights" signal approaching vessels to make land, and "leading lights" guide navigators into bays and harbors along navigable waterways.

The lighthouse tower, constructed on solid rock and pneumatic caissons, contains lighting mechanisms, engines, and spare parts, as well as the keeper's quarters. Saucerlike Fresnel lenses with pentagonal prisms project light at irregular, alternating intervals, while sealed-beam lenses rotate at varying speeds, similarly to the traditional long-range search light. The older, barrel-shaped lenses and kerosene-burning lamps, made up of prisms and glass panels attached to a metal frame, have been replaced by acetylene gas burners and incandescent lamps that can be operated either manually or automatically and that shut off at daybreak
